

April 21, 2009

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS (for non-licensees)

TCO Development has per 2 March, 2009 introduced a new TCO Label, TCO CERTIFIED, a device mark that will be used for all certified products qualified for the new criteria issued by TCO Development.

With the new TCO label, there has been a revision of the General Terms version 2.1 regulating e.g. the terms of use of the new TCO label. The new General Terms version 3.0 will apply to all applications for the new TCO label as well as to the older versions. All applicants are therefore encouraged to sign the new agreement with TCO Development for that purpose as soon as it is announced.

Although the 3.0 version the General Terms has not yet been announced, TCO Development will handle applications for certificates based on General Terms version 2.9 during a transitional period and under the following conditions:

- The applicant accepts that General Terms version 3.0 (as soon as the version is announced) will in all regards apply to any certificate that TCO Development may issue during the transitional period.
- The applicant shall accept General Terms version 3.0 in writing and provide TCO Development with duly signed copy thereof upon the announcement of General Terms version 3.0 on TCO Development's website www.tcodevelopment.com
- The applicant accepts that any certificate issued during the transitional period will be rescinded and declared null and void if the applicant fails to provide TCO Development with a signed copy as envisaged above.
- The transitional period ends when General Terms version 3.0 version of the General Terms is announced on TCO Development website.

Please contact TCO Development if you have any questions as to the meaning of these Transitional Provisions.